

8 BENEFITS OF SUBSTITUTE TEACHING IN TIMES OF A GIG ECONOMY

During these times of increased job loss and career uncertainty, many are searching for employment and flexibility in the ability to work select days and from home. Teachers are needed now more than ever as the world makes a shift to increased online learning. If you have been searching for a job that offers flexibility and allows you to leverage your expertise, substitute teaching may be a good fit for you.

The following are 8 Benefits of Substitute Teaching:

You can help parents keep their children on track with learning and development

The reality is every teacher is not going to be able to work every day. You can help students stay on track with their education while offering a positive environment for growth.

Unlock skills that you forgot you have

Substitute teaching may challenge you to tap into transferable skills that you may not have used in some time. By tapping into these skills may help you unlock new potential and better prepare you for your next long-term role. Keep your skills sharp!

Help the schools that need it most

Vacancies in schools can stress an organization due to a lack of people resources. By offering yourself as a resource, you are supporting the growth and development of students while helping a school reach its educational goals.

Design your schedule

Having the ability to design your own schedule has many benefits for an individual that needs flexibility in their life. You can work on days that are best for you while earning.

Work Multiple Jobs

Having flexibility can also allow you to work another job. This is great if you are trying to reach a specific professional development and or financial goal.

Select Your Classroom

Substitute teaching allows you to select the class you prefer to work with based on age, subject, frequency, etc. Maybe you have always loved science! Use your love for a particular topic to help young scholars appreciate that topic as well!

Build Your Network

Having to stay inside limits our ability to network as we did before COVID-19. Meeting other educators and staff will allow you to expand your network while working on landing your next role.

Bring Joy to Your Life

Being an educator can be an adventure. Imagine being able to transform the lives of our future. Students are eager to have new and creative ways to learn. Having an impact on the lives of others will bring joy to your life!

In conclusion, the world has a problem, and that problem is a lack of educators during this pandemic. Lend your expertise and gain the reward of shaping our scholars and future leaders.
